FICTIONAL DEMO ONLY. Original sample rules for RAG testing. Not an actual company policy or legal guidance. Real use requires authorized HR review and applicable requirements.

1. Purpose and scope

This fictional policy describes movement to a role with greater scope or responsibility for full-time demo employees. A promotion requires role-level evidence and a documented organizational need. It is separate from routine salary review, a title-only change or a lateral move. None of these decisions is executed by WorkforceAI.

2.1 Standard eligibility

For the standard process, an employee must have completed 12 months in the current role and have a latest completed full-cycle performance review of Meets or above. Eligibility permits consideration; it does not guarantee a nomination or promotion. Employees without a completed full-cycle review need the exception process in Section 2.2.

2.2 Exceptions and fairness

A department lead may request an exception to tenure or review availability with written evidence of sustained next-level scope. HR must approve the exception before panel review. Do not treat approved leave, remote work, sensitive traits or an attrition score as disqualifying. Apply comparable evidence expectations to comparable roles and record the reason for exceptions.

3.1 Promotion evidence

A nomination packet contains the current role, proposed role, role criteria, work examples, relevant skills, demonstrated next-level responsibility, latest review and employee comments. Skill-graph gaps identify development needs but are not automatic rejection rules. Missing resume keywords or unsupported AI statements are not proof that a person lacks capability.

3.2 Organizational requirements

The department lead identifies the business need and proposed scope; Finance verifies an approved budget and HR checks role consistency. A strong performance rating alone does not establish a vacancy, budget or next-level scope. If a requirement is missing, the panel records what is unresolved and provides a development discussion rather than an automatic decision.

Procedures, safeguards and examples

4. Review cycles and nominations

Standard panels convene in April and October. Managers submit nominations by 15 March or 15 September respectively. Employees may ask their manager for consideration at any time and request HR review if they believe a nomination was overlooked. Out-of-cycle review needs a department lead request and HR approval; there is no guaranteed emergency promotion.

5. Panel and approval

The panel includes the department lead, an independent role reviewer and HR. Members disclose conflicts and recuse where needed. Review evidence against the proposed role criteria. The panel records a recommendation and reasons; a department head and HR provide final written approval, subject to Finance budget confirmation. Until written approval and an effective date are issued, the current role remains in force.

6. Communication and reconsideration

HR communicates the outcome, effective date if approved, and relevant evidence or development actions within 10 working days of the panel meeting. An employee may request factual reconsideration within 10 working days of receiving the outcome. HR responds within a further 10 working days or communicates an extension. The review checks evidence and process; it does not promise a changed result.

7. Development, records and AI use

For deferred nominations, agree milestones, support and a future review date with the employee. Keep the packet and approvals in restricted HR records. AI may organize job-related evidence with source links and mark unknowns. It may not recommend a promotion solely to reduce predicted attrition or automatically approve, deny, rank or set pay. Salary bands and increase amounts are not defined in this pack.

8. Worked examples

Example A: 14 months in role plus a Meets full-cycle review meets standard eligibility, but scope, budget and panel review are still required. Example B: an Exceeds review after 8 months requires a tenure exception before review. Example C: a high attrition-model signal provides no entitlement to promotion or pay adjustment. Any proposed development plan remains a human discussion.
