FICTIONAL DEMO ONLY. Original sample rules for RAG testing. Not an actual company policy or legal guidance. Real use requires authorized HR review and applicable requirements.

1. Purpose and scope

This policy describes fictional remote work for full-time demo employees whose duties can be performed securely away from the office. It covers routine hybrid days and temporary arrangements. Eligibility depends on role tasks, access needs and service coverage. An employee without a remote-compatible role may ask HR to consider another arrangement.

2.1 Routine hybrid work

Eligible employees may request up to 2 remote working days per week. Submit the planned days at least 2 working days in advance. Manager approval is required and must be recorded in the HR portal. Days do not accumulate or carry forward. Approval for one week does not create an automatic entitlement for future weeks.

2.2 Coverage and exceptions

The manager reviews onsite duties, team coverage and agreed deliverables. If declined, record the task-related reason and discuss another schedule. An arrangement exceeding 2 routine remote days in a week needs both manager and HR approval. An attrition score, personal demographic trait or AI recruitment score cannot determine eligibility.

3.1 Temporary remote work after illness

An employee returning from sick leave may request up to 5 consecutive working days of temporary remote work. The request needs manager and HR approval, feasible duties and a written start and end date. Submit it before the arrangement begins where possible. It is distinct from sick leave, uses no leave balance, and can exceed the routine 2-day weekly limit when specifically approved. HR may request a minimal fitness statement where duties require it, without unnecessary diagnosis details.

3.2 Extension or other temporary needs

More than 5 consecutive working days, or temporary remote work for another reason, requires a fresh case-by-case manager and HR decision. This policy creates no automatic extension. If the employee is unable to work, use the Leave Policy process instead. Employees must not be expected to work during approved medical leave.

Procedures, safeguards and examples

4. Availability and work records

Agree working hours, reachable channels and deliverables before remote work starts. For the standard demo schedule, core collaboration hours are 10:00-16:00 IST within an 8-hour working day, excluding breaks. Any alternate schedule needs manager agreement. Use the normal attendance system. Notify the manager promptly about internet or power outages and agree a practical response rather than silently recording a full day of work.

5. Security and equipment

Use a company-managed device, approved accounts, multi-factor authentication and the company VPN when required. Do not download employee records to personal devices or upload them to unapproved AI services. Lock the screen, prevent household access, and use approved storage. Report a lost device or suspected data exposure immediately to IT and HR. Refer to Employee Code of Conduct, Sections 3.1 and 3.2.

6. Location and expenses

Work from the location approved in the request and notify the manager before changing it. International remote work is not covered; request HR review before making plans. The company supplies approved equipment. Internet, furniture or home-office expenses are not automatically reimbursable; a written HR and Finance exception must precede the purchase. Business travel expenses follow the Travel Reimbursement Policy.

7. Review, cancellation and records

Managers may change a remote schedule for documented operational needs, normally with 2 working days of notice; urgent incidents may require shorter notice. Discuss a feasible alternative with the employee. HR reviews complaints within 5 working days. Keep approvals and schedules in the HR portal; store health documents separately with restricted access. Review temporary arrangements on their recorded end date.

8. Worked examples

Example A: a one-week remote arrangement after illness can cover 5 working days under Section 3.1 with both approvals, even though routine hybrid work is limited to 2 days weekly. Example B: approving sick leave alone does not authorize those remote days. Example C: a request to work abroad cannot be answered as approved by this document because Section 6 routes it to HR review.
